The CERIS Undergraduate Research Symposium is designed to provide undergraduate students at the University of Pittsburgh and 29 other CERIS member institutions with research experience and an opportunity to develop presentation skills as well as to provide recognition of excellent student scholarship. With the 2012 theme of Islam in the World: Politics, People, and Places, students may submit papers on topics such as Tahrir Square and the Occupy movement; fashion fusion: Turkish art and German design; rap, rock, and the Muslim faithful in Indonesia; and Muslims in American democratic discourse. Students should keep in mind that the field of Islamic studies encompasses many languages, literatures, and disciplines. It extends from the 7th century to the present and includes broad geographical areas of the world. Islamic studies can include, but are not limited to, history, religion, law, politics, sociology, science, art and culture, language, and literature. Students from all majors are eligible to participate in the symposium. For more information, visit www.cerisnet.org.